First Generation

1. William New was born about 1775 in North Carolina. He died after 1850 at the age of 75 in Edgefield District, South Carolina. The 1820 census lists William New living in Edgefield District, South Carolina. The record lists 1 male born 1776/1794 [William], 1 male born 1795/1804 [John or William, Jr.], 1 male born 1810/1820 [Name Unknown], 1 female born 1776/1794 [Prudence], and 1 female born 1810-1820 [Name Unknown]. This record indicates that William was living in Edgefield District by 1820.

The following record indicates that William's first wife's name was Prudence: "Edgefield District, State of South Carolina: Benjamin Singleton appoints Lewis Holmes to receive from the admr. of his grandfather Samuel Medlock, his legacy, 27 Dec 1832. [signed] Benjamin Singleton. Wit: William New & Prudence New".

In 1850, the census finds the family living in Edgefield District, South Carolina and lists William New (75, farmer), Elizabeth (30), Joseph (9), and William (1). This census indicates that, obviously, Elizabeth was his second wife.

While the first English settlers, sailing from Barbados, landed on the coast of what is now South Carolina in 1670 to found the the towns of Charles Town and Port Royal, central and upstate South Carolina remained a "frontier" region until after 1800. In 1761, the Cherokee land cessions opened the upstate to settlement and new settlers, primarily from Pennsylvania, Virginia, and North Carolina flooded in. William apparently was one of these.

The 1850 census for William New, and later census records for his children, clearly indicate that he was born in North Carolina. There were numerous New families in eastern North Carolina prior to 1790 when the first census was taken. William may have hailed from one of these. But, no records have yet been found that pre-date the 1820 census that finds him in Edgefield District, South Carolina.

As upstate South Carolina opened to settlement, in 1769 Ninety-Six District was created as the judicial subdivision for the large area between the Broad and Savannah Rivers, centered on the small community of Ninety-Six. As the population increased, in 1785 Ninety-Six District was subdivided into Abbeville, Edgefield, Newberry, Laurens, Union, and Spartanburg Counties. Then, in 1800, Ninety-Six District was abolished and these earlier "counties" were designated as "districts". This arrangement lasted until 1868 when each district was re-designated as a "county". Thus, in the records, you will see the same area called both a county and a district at different times. Starting in 1871, as new counties were formed, Edgefield County lost area...first to Aiken County in 1871 and then to Saluda County (1895), Dorchester County (1897), and McCormick County (1916).

Many of the towns that were populated by the New family in Edgefield County became part of Aiken County in 1871...including Gregg and Windsor...while others, like Johnston, Warrentonville, and Edgefield, remained in Edgefield County.

(10), and Eula M. (3).

Since Bunyon New's 1917 WWI draft registration and the 1920 census both indicate that he has his sister Eula Mae New living with his family and Cournel's registration shows that his sister [Georgia Bell] was living with his family. This appears to indicate that Josephine died before 1917.
